SNHU's Gustafson Welcome Center

Hooksett, NH – Southern New Hampshire University will soon have a new welcome center across the street from what is now the main entrance.

The Gustafson Welcome Center, named after Dr. Richard A. Gustafson, who served as the institution's fourth president, will house undergraduate admissions including freshman, transfer, and international admissions; UC marketing; and the office of institutional advancement (including the office of alumni engagement). The two-story building, designed by Perry Dean Rogers & Partners Architects and constructed by Harvey Construction, was inspired by

New England tradition and open spaces.

TFMoran, Inc. provided survey, site/civil engineering, and permitting services for the project. The university also plans to enhance the entrance to the campus to complement the new center.
